The Philippine Constitution provides that “the State values the dignity of every human person and guarantees full respect for human rights.” This is likewise guaranteed in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) to which the Philippines is a signatory.

Prostitution is a massive problem in our country. A decade ago the number of persons exploited in prostitution in the Philippines was estimated at 300,000 to 500,000, a great portion of which is composed of women. In 2004, the number of women exploited in prostitution alone reached 600,000. This estimate has ballooned to 800,000 in 2005.

Women and children are the most vulnerable in this ‘flesh trade.’ In the 1998 count, there were around 75,000 children exploited in prostitution. This is about ¼ of the estimated number of persons exploited in prostitution. Annually, it is estimated that 3,266 children are forced into prostitution. At present, our country is fourth among the nations with the most number of children in prostitution as revealed in a study of UNICEF.

Poverty is often cited as the primary reason why some people choose to engage in prostitution. It forces some persons to seek any means to survive - even if it means allowing themselves to be abused and endangering their lives. Whether voluntary or involuntary, we cannot deny the fact that this system uses, oppresses, and violates the rights of persons exploited in prostitution, particularly, women and children.

This measure was left pending in the 14th Congress when the committee report, which the undersigned defended on the floor, and which was based on the bill first introduced by Sen. Miriam Defensor-Santiago, failed to get third reading approval.

This bill seeks to address the root of the problem. It shifts the accountability of prostitution from the prostituted person to the exploiters. It emphasizes that persons exploited in prostitution may be a woman, a man, or a child. Prostitution is defined as any act involving the use of a person for sexual gratification, pleasure or exploitation, or any act that promotes the latter. Through this, all involved will be held accountable including the traffickers, pimps, brothel owners, organized crime members, and corrupt officials.

Given the reason that people are forced into prostitution due to poverty, the bill seeks to change the public perception and treatment of persons exploited in prostitution as victims of the system and not as criminals. The bill also provides for other mechanisms to ensure that the human rights of persons exploited in prostitution are upheld and that the victims, aside from being extracted out of the system, can go back and reinstate themselves into the society through certain rehabilitation programs.
Today, the number of persons exploited in prostitution has already reached the millionth mark. Let us not wait for this number to grow even more. Let us not wait for the day when we outrank all the other nations with most number of prostitutes. Let us not wait for the day when our country will be recognized as the "Haven of Prostitution". Let us uphold the dignity and the rights of all men, women and children. Let us stop prostitution.

It is for these reasons that I earnestly sought the approval of this bill.
