OF THE PHILIPPINES)
First Regular Session)

SENATE
S. No. 1748

RECEIVED BY: [Signature]

Introduced by Senator Miriam Defensor Santiago

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Land is the ultimate resource, for without it, life on earth cannot be sustained, and thus, good stewardship of the land is essential for present and future generations.

The world's population has doubled in the last 40 years and passed the 6 billion mark. It is predicted to reach 8.5 billion by the year 2030, a population level thought by many scientists to be the maximum number of people supported by the world's resources and capacity for food production. Less than half of the world's population has secure access to land.

The International Federation of Surveyors (FIG) in cooperation with the United Nations hosted the "Bathurst Workshop on Land Tenure and Cadastral Infrastructures for Sustainable Development" in Australia in October, 1999 and concluded that sustainable development is just rhetoric without appropriate land administration system. The Bathurst declaration recommends a global commitment to provide effective legal security of tenure and access to property for all men and women and to provide reforms in the land administration system essential for sustainable development and facilitating full and equal access for men and women to land-related economic opportunities, such as credit and natural resources.

The performance, however, of government agencies undertaking land administration functions such as land surveys, mapping, classification, titling and disposition and registration is below par. The services being provided by these agencies are not contributing to address our domestic problems on sustainable development, much more to the global concerns. The problem is largely contributed by fundamental legal and institutional defects in both the structure and operations of the land administration system. For one, there are many laws governing the land administration functions including the existence of a number of institutions administering our scarce land resources resulting to confusions, delays, high transactions costs (government and users), low investment, and graft and corruption.

These institutional and structural defects in land administration besides not contributing to the sustainable development of natural resources have also given rise to major inefficiencies including extensive delays in the disposition and titling of alienable and disposable land, inaccurate and incomplete land information and records, duplicate and fake titles, duplication and overlap of activities between government agencies, and unnecessary costs to both the national and local governments and the users/clients of land administration services.

To address these problems, the Government has been undertaking a Land Administration and Management Project preparatory to a long-term program to fundamentally reform the present land administration system, thereby promoting sustainable development, economic growth, and poverty alleviation.

However, there is a widespread agreement that a fundamental prerequisite for the pursuit of the necessary reforms is the consolidation and streamlining within a single government agency of land administration powers and functions currently dispersed across the Department of Justice's Land Registration Authority and Registries of Deeds and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources' Lands Management Bureau, Land Management Services in the regional, provincial and community offices, National Mapping and Resource Information Authority, and CARP Secretariat and its field offices.

The integration of these agencies/offices into a single agency will:

- Implement the necessary reforms in the land administration system to enable to provide land information and services necessary to pursue sustainable management of natural resources, among others;
- Enable the integrated planning, budgeting and implementation of the long term land titling program, including the development of integrated land classification, land titling and records management;
- Provide the necessary management structure for the creation and extension of a One Stop Shop network for the delivery of land titling, registration and information services to members of the public;

- Consolidate staffing patterns and training programs for government staff engaged in the provision of land administration services, thereby establishing the basis for the major training and professional development of staff needed to support the proposed reforms and improve their career structures and opportunities;
- Create scope to achieve significant savings through the elimination over time of duplicated administrative support services and other costs arising from the current fragmentation of land administration services; and
- Enable the development of increased transparency and enhancement of professionalism and accountability across the whole land administration system.

The Philippines is unusual, compared to its neighboring countries, in that the government's land administration functions are currently dispersed across multiple agencies. Without integrating these three agencies, it will be difficult to undertake the major long term investment of resources that will be necessary to implement the required over all reforms.

The proposed Land Administration Reform Act seeks to enable the lands sector to contribute to sustainable development, economic growth and poverty alleviation. The bill's enactment will ensure Philippines' recognition to the global efforts for sustainable development while providing an improved access to land and services to the majority of our Filipino people especially the poor.*
