S. No. 1757

Introduced by Senator Miriam Defensor Santiago

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The deprivation of liberty burdens men and women differently. In many instances, a defendant who is the custodial parent of a minor child may not be fully apprised of the consequences resulting from her conviction. Since women tend to be the primary caregiver for her children, imprisonment affects both the mother and her children profoundly. It is indisputable that a mother's role in the development of very young children is especially important, hence, separation from the mother may have long-term effects on the children and on society. Research suggests the absence of the parental bond may contribute to the delinquency of the children of incarcerated mothers.

In order for our prison policies to conform to our fundamental law and international obligations, policy makers must take cognizance of the rights of persons under detention, the unique relationship of a mother and her child, and the need for special consideration for children living in exceptionally difficult conditions.

Our Constitution in Article 11, Section 12 states that: "The State recognizes the sanctity of family life and shall protect and strengthen the family as a basic autonomous social institution."

Article 25 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights Article proclaims that: "Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance."

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), ratified by the Philippines, places special emphasis on the protection of mothers and their children: "Pregnant women who are deprived of their liberty should receive humane treatment and respect for their inherent dignity at all times, and in particular during the birth and while caring for their newborn children; States parties should report on facilities to ensure this and on medical and health care for such mothers and their babies.” (Human Rights Committee, General Comment 28 on Article 3 of the ICCPR).

This bill will make it mandatory for the appropriate government agencies to establish programs that support imprisoned parents in the performance of their parental and child-rearing responsibilities. Such programs will take due consideration of the rights of all those directly affected - mothers, fathers, and children. It will also guarantee assistance, when needed, to dependents and, in particular, minor members of the families of detained or imprisoned persons.*
