EXPLANATORY NOTE

This bill seeks to declare November 23 as Philippine Press Freedom Day.

Every May 3, the world celebrates World Press Freedom Day, following a recommendation adopted at the twenty-sixth session of UNESCO's General Conference in 1991. This however, does not have any significance to Philippine press history. This day comes and goes without a fuss in our country.

But on November 23, 2009, Philippine press history changed in an instant as 57 people were killed on one of the most gruesome politically motivated crimes of the decade. Genalyn Magudadatu and her family, most of them women, joined by 37 journalists, composed a convoy of five cars on the way to the Commission on Elections (COMELEC) to file her husband Ismael Mangudadatu's candidacy. They were met by a hundred armed men, forcefully led into a vacant lot and were shot at close range, and most of them either abused, raped or mutilated, evidently as part of efforts to prevent them from filing.

While we are considered to have the freest press in Asia, we are also bombarded with numbers of murdered and disappeared journalists. Remembered as the single deadliest event for journalists in recent history, the Maguindanao massacre is and continues to be a symbol of a fight for press freedom and their rights in the practice of their profession. The commemoration of Philippine Press Freedom Day shall serve as a fitting reminder that we will never forget sacrifices of these journalists who gave up their lives in the practice of their profession.

Freedom of the press not only includes the right to speak and write but also includes the right to be respected and protected from threats, intimidation and harm to their lives and property while in the pursuit of their profession. It comprises primarily of the safety and security of those who want to spread the truth. Certainly, the Maguindanao massacre is a wanton violation of their rights, and the day that such an abuse of power and machinery happened at the expense of innocent truth seekers must be a day to commemorate and honor their sacrifices to prevent another ignominy in the history of the Philippine press.

Lastly, the Philippine Press Freedom Day seeks to promote and uphold freedom and heighten awareness on press freedom, so that journalists may freely and securely report the truth no matter who gets hurt by it.

The bill was filed in the 15th Congress but for lack of time, its progress was halted at the committee level. In light of all these circumstances, the swift passage of this bill is earnestly sought.

GRACE POE
