EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Constitution mandates the State to protect and promote the right to health of the people (Article II, Section 15) and to undertake appropriate health human resource development responsive to the country's needs and problems (Articles XIII, Section 12).

At the 1978 international Alma Ata Conference held in the then USSR, the Philippines joined several other countries in signing a declaration calling on all governments to "formulate national policies, strategies, and plans of actions to launch and sustain primary health care as part of a comprehensive national health system and in coordination with other sectors." This was the country's formal declaration that it would adopt a "Primary Health Care" approach.

Nearly four decades have passed since the country signed the declaration, and through the years the Philippines' Primary Health Care system has grown and has made some modest gains. Several gaps however remain, including the lack of an institutional means of promoting and ensuring the dental health of every Filipino.

Almost entire communities in the country suffer from two of the most prevalent of dental diseases: Tooth decay and gum diseases. 92% of Filipino are suffering from dental caries—tooth decay or cavities—while 78% have gum diseases. A 2015 study<sup>1</sup> even suggested that the Philippines has the highest number of people wearing dentures in Asia.

The magnitude of the dental problem is reflected in its ranking as one of the highest in the country's morbidity picture. In economic terms, every tooth affected means the loss of productivity of two days, lost opportunities, recurring pain and severe discomfort as well as increased cost of dental treatments.

The proposed bill aims to reverse this unfortunate situation by creating a dental unit in each of the rural health units (RHUs) listed under the Department of Health as part of the country's overall Primary Health Care strategy.

By ensuring that each RHU under the DOH has at least one dentist serving, the priority targets of dental health services—pre-school children, school children, pregnant and non-pregnant mothers and adults—will be adequately served. It will cost more in their services, but the benefits to be derived would more than compensate for the cost.

In view of the foregoing, the swift passage of the bill is earnestly sought.
