SENATE
S.B No. 2146

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Penal Code, Article 247 provides:

Art. 247. Death or physical injuries inflicted under exceptional circumstances. – Any legally married person who having surprised his spouse in the act of committing sexual intercourse with another person, shall kill any of them or both of them in the act or immediately thereafter, or shall inflict upon them any serious physical injury, shall suffer the penalty of destierro.

If he shall inflict upon them physical injuries of any other kind, he shall be exempt from punishment.

These rules shall be applicable, under the same circumstances, to parents with respect to their daughters under eighteen years of age, and their seducer, while the daughters are living with their parents. xxx

While the crimes of parricide and murder under the same Code are considered heinous crimes where the accused is meted capital punishment, this provision merely sentences the accused to destierro. This is not intended as a penalty but to remove the perpetrating spouse or parent from the vicinity and to protect him or her from acts of reprisal principally by relatives of the deceased spouse or child [People v. Lucron, C.A. 57 O.G. 7367].

The provision does not define a felony, but rather, exempts the accused from punishment. A parent or spouse is entitled to this benefit on the presumption that he or she would be acting in a justified burst of passion [People v. Gonzales, 69 Phil. 66 (1939)].

However, the article and its resultant court decisions run contrary to current state policy. The Constitution, Article 3, Section 1 provides, “No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.” This necessarily rejects the policy of allowing an individual to take the law into his own hands. Thus, the circumstances referred to in Article 247 must be treated only as possibly mitigating the liability of the accused but should not provide absolute exemption.

Further, domestic violence against women and excessive corporal punishment for children have been rejected by the passage of R.A. No 7610 otherwise known as "Special Protection of Children Against Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act" and R.A. No. 9262 otherwise known as "Anti-Violence Against Women and Their Children Act of 2004". The latter provides:

SEC. 2. Declaration of Policy. – It is hereby declared that the State values the dignity of women and children and guarantees full respect for human rights. The State also recognizes the need to protect the family and its members particularly women and children, from violence and threats to their personal safety and security.

Towards this end, the State shall exert efforts to address violence committed against women and children in keeping with the fundamental freedoms guaranteed under the Constitution and the Provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the convention on the Elimination of all forms of discrimination Against Women, Convention on the Rights of the Child xxx

The Philippines' international obligations under the Convention of the Rights of the Child, Article 19 mandates that the government:

xxx Take all appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to protect the child from all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation including sexual abuse, while in the care of parent(s), legal guardians(s) or any other person who has care of the child

Article 247 perpetuates a patriarchal and protectionist approach to women and children; it assumes that women and children are under the custody of the men in the household; hence, women or children have no right to make decisions independent of their parents or spouse. Above all, Article 247 is a thinly disguised Philippine version of "honor killing". Honor killings of women can be defined as acts of murder in which "a woman is killed for her actual or perceived immoral behavior." (Yasmeen Hassan, "The Fate of Pakistani Women", International Herald Tribune, May 25, 1999. Such "immoral behavior" may take the form of marital infidelity, demanding a divorce, or failing to serve a meal on time.)

Such acts are abhorrent to our own current state policies and undermine the values we share with the international community. Thus, this law must be repealed.
