EXPLANATORY NOTE

Republic Act No. 8485, also known as the “Animal Welfare Act of 1998” is the primary law punishing cruelty to animals. Section 8 of said Act provides for the penalty of imprisonment of not less than six (6) months nor more than two (2) years or a fine or not less than One thousand pesos (P1,000) nor more that Five thousand pesos (P5,000) or both at the discretion of the Court, for the violation of the provisions of the Act.

However, I believe that the penalty for the violation of the Act is too low to serve as a deterrent. In the United Kingdom, the penalty for the violation of their animal welfare act is £20,000.

Just recently, at least 112 dogs were saved from ending up as a tasty dish of “azucena” after policemen intercepted an alleged delivery run along EDSA in Balintawak, Quezon City. The police discovered that the offender is a repeat offender. The Network for Animals noted that many of those arrested for violation of Republic Act no. 8485 are repeat offenders. They can afford to commit the violation again because the penalties are too low.

Therefore, in order to make the law an effective deterrent to the commission of future violations of the Animal Welfare Act, a higher, more realistic penalty should be imposed.¹
