EXPLANATORY NOTE

Violence against women has been defined in the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women:

“Violence Against Women (VAW) is any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life.”

In year 2000, the Department of Social Welfare and Development reported that in the first six months of 2000 there were 4,468 reports of women in "especially difficult circumstances". Nearly half of the cases are reported to have involved physical abuse, maltreatment and battery while 14 percent reportedly involved sexual abuse.

When crime, drugs, and violence spill over from the streets into the schools, providing a safe learning environment becomes increasingly difficult. Creating such an environment where students can learn depends on a partnership among students, parents, teachers, and other community institutions. School violence can be prevented by taking action to protect students, particularly women students, who can be victims of discrimination and violence.

To help improve safety of women students within educational institutions, it is important that school administrations establish offices that focus on formulating policies and guidelines on how to promote school security and student safety by training school personnel in conflict resolution, problem solving, drug prevention, crisis intervention, cultural sensitivity, classroom management, and counseling skills.

This bill seeks to address violence in educational institutions by mandating the creation of a women's desk in all such institutions. Its aim shall be to serve women students by protecting them against all forms of violence in a comprehensive and personalized manner which adheres to the national policies on women's protection. A women's desk will also focus on receiving complains of violence against women and strive to help victims recover.*
