EXPLANATORY NOTE

Article 2, Section XVIII of the 1987 Constitution declares that "The State affirms labor as a primary social economic force. It shall protect the rights of workers and promote their welfare." However, the present condition of doctors of medicine working in government hospitals and public health institutions runs counter to the aforementioned policy.

The entry level for resident physicians in government service is Php15,841 as Medical Officer III. Although it is atypical for the Department of Health to confer Medical Officer I or II positions, local government units can do so. A junior resident physician who holds a position of Medical Officer I is entitled to a meager basic salary of Php12,546. This does not do justice to our hardworking doctors who have spent years in their studies and whose duty goes beyond the normal eight-hour workload.

The government has in effect escorted doctors out of the country making the Philippines the second-largest exporter of physicians, next to India, as per a World Health Organization (WHO) report. Recent studies confirm that 70 percent of doctors have emigrated for higher-paying posts overseas and have even traded their medical profession to become nurses.<sup>1</sup> Consequently, the exodus of doctors in the last five years is exacting a toll on the country's already second-rate health service. The ratio of doctor vis-à-vis patients in the Philippines is 1: 28, 493 (one doctor per 28, 493 Filipinos) – a far cry from the ideal 1:1,000 ratio prescribed by the WHO.

This bill seeks to address this alarming outflow of doctors and its repercussions by increasing the salary of government physicians and providing additional incentives therefor. It aims to afford our government doctors the right to a decent pay and benefits long withheld such as Loyalty Service Pay; Transportation, Representation, Food, and Medical Allowances; and Educational Grant. Moreover, this bill intends to attract doctors to the rural areas by providing for higher allowances for those assigned in lower classed municipalities.

In view of the foregoing, immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
