EXPLANATORY NOTE

Hyde Park in London, a royal park and once a hunting ground for Henry VI11 is now best known for its famous Speakers' Corner where people speak their minds. Central Park in New York City is the most frequently visited urban park in the United States and its appearance in many movies and television shows has made it famous. A model for urban parks worldwide, the Central Park, has been restored, managed and preserved by the Central Park Conservancy, a private non-profit organization, in partnership with the city government.

The Philippines has Rizal Park which is popularly known as the place where our national hero, Jose Rizal, was executed. His death ushered in the Philippine Republic, Asia's first democracy and his mortal remains as a symbol of Filipino nationhood. Through the years it has become the venue for the celebration of our independence day and the place where the public go on weekends for fresh air, leisurely walks and picnics with family and friends. However, despite its attraction to ordinary folks and tourists because of its historical and political significance, its drawing power has significantly declined due to the deterioration of its facilities, amenities and environs.

In its effort to develop Rizal Park, the government had issued several Executive Orders in the past for its development, to wit: E.O. No. 30, January 14, 1963, created the Executive Committee for the development of Rizal Park, among other parks; E.O. No. 69, February 7, 1964, designated the Committee as the "National Parks Development Committee"; E.O. No. 120-A, January 30, 1987, directed the Committee to be attached to the then Ministry of Tourism and E.O. No. 160, October 13, 1999, reorganized and designated the members of the Committee.

Rizal Park is among several parks in the metropolis being managed and operated by the government through the National Parks Development Committee (NPDC). It is responsible for their' beautification, preservation and maintenance. Even with the private sector efforts to redeem its glory days and maximize its potential as tourist destination, all efforts failed to serve the purpose due to various recurring problems, among which are vagrancy, illegal vendors and lack of security personnel.

This bill, therefore, seeks to fully revitalize Rizal Park to attain international standards by strengthening the powers and functions of the National Parks Development Committee (NPDC) and appropriating funds for the purpose. The Department of Tourism (DOT) shall direct the NPDC to prioritize the development of Rizal Park and shall declare the Rizal Park Development Program as part of the department's medium-term infrastructure program.

The private sector, especially business enterprises operating in Metro Manila shall likewise actively participate in the development program, project and activities to be undertaken by the DOT through the NPDC.

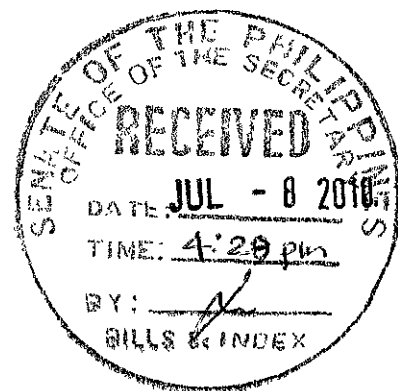

In view of the foregoing, the immediate passage of this bill is respectfully recommended.
