EXPLANATORY NOTE

Goat, sheep and other small ruminants perform an important part in our country's agricultural development. They are reared widely in small farm systems which form the pivot of traditional agriculture. They produce meat, milk, fiber and hides which if developed, can be a main source of income for the farmers. They also perform a variety of miscellaneous functions such as dung production which can be used as organic fertilizer or as fuel for biomass energy.

The fact remains, however, that despite the wide importance and apparent advantages, small ruminants have not been accorded adequate attention, compared, for example, to cattle development. Inadequate emphasis and development are reflected in goat and sheep breeding and propagation, thus, they have little impact on food production despite wide recognition of their value during the last decade. It is therefore important to consider the opportunities for further developing both species and other small ruminants in the context of their potential to develop our agricultural sector and raise the income of small farmers.

In view of the foregoing, approval of this bill is earnestly sought.

JUAN MIGUEL F. ZUBIRI
