EXPLANATORY NOTE

People all over the world have their own horror stories to tell in the matter of credit card hidden charges and the never-ending payments they seem to be making which have more often than not, exceeded the principal amount that they have obtained as a loan in the first place.

If you don't know how to protect yourself, you could end up paying hand over fist for fees hidden in your bills.

The consumer public has to be protected by the State, especially in these times of financial crisis, recession and trouble that has cast the world in its dark spell. Even though vigilance is the most effective weapon, the State still needs to do what it can to protect the citizenry.

In the US alone, Consumer Reports estimates that consumers collectively pay at least $216 billion in financial fees each year. That works out to about $750 a person in miscellaneous fees. Your cell phone bill and your Internet service provider may slap on some hidden fees, but the biggest culprit is credit cards. Americans pay an estimated $31 billion a year in credit-card fees.

In most countries, by law, hidden fees are not allowed to be imposed on the customers, they must be reflected clearly in every billing statement received by the individual to ensure that payments in excess of what is actually due him is avoided. The same vigilance and protection must be afforded to the customers and the citizenry. Henceforth, the urgent passage of this legislation is earnestly sought.
