EXPLANATORY NOTE

There's too much technology in the car — dangerous technology that can kill drivers. Experts say that technology is turning the car into a “mobile living room” and that could be dangerous. Portable televisions in cars, especially in the front, are hazardous and distract motorists. Their presence is dangerous and may cause accidents and traffic jams.

According to a survey, conducted by Internet-based research and marketing firm InsightExpress, watching television while driving is dangerous. Although not scientific, the survey and the proposed bill bolster beliefs that watching television causes distraction while driving and may contribute to automobile accidents and near misses. For most motorists, the issue should come as no surprise.

Safety issues must be given more premium than the immense popularity of portable televisions on cars. Early evidence suggests that vehicular crashes involving watching television is similar to those involving other distractions, such as eating, applying makeup, using an electric razor, drinking coffee, changing radio stations or other common activities. The proposed Bill seeks to make it illegal to view a TV while driving.
