EXPLANATORY NOTE

Various factors can provide explanation why accidents at sea are common in the Philippines. Apart from storms and typhoons, negligence and unsafe state of passenger vessels play crucial role in these accidents.

According to government records, the country has a very poor maritime safety record with an average of more than 200 accidents every year. Sea accidents in the past have been blamed specifically on overloaded and poor maintenance of ships or ferries, lack of warning about bad weather and ship's crew incompetence.¹¹

In the country, under Republic Act No. 5173, the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) was created and mandated particularly to inspect and approve vessels for operation, and enforce provisions for the safety of life and property on vessels. The Domestic Shipping Development Act of 2004 (R.A. 9295), however, provided for the complete transfer of these functions to the Maritime Industry Authority (MARINA).

Although the recently-passed Philippine Coast Guard Law of 2009 or Republic Act No. 9993 gave the PCG the authority to conduct inspections on all merchant ships and vessels to ensure compliance with ship safety standards, the said law did not provide for clear-cut provisions regarding ship safety inspection services and penalties concerning the same.

This bill puts the maritime safety administration in the right perspective by giving the responsibility of ship safety inspection solely to the PCG, with the end in view of preventing the loss of thousands of lives and property caused by sea accidents every year, and putting a halt on the blaming game among government agencies.

In view of the foregoing, approval of this bill is highly recommended.
