EXPLANATORY NOTE

The coconut industry comprises a substantial sector of Philippine agriculture. It is a major source of our export earnings with an average receipt of at least $800 million a year from the export of thirty (30) traditional and non-traditional coconut products and by-products. Popularly known as "tree of life," about twenty (20) million Filipinos or almost one-third (1/3) of the population depends on the industry for their livelihood.

The Philippines is said to be the largest producer of coconut oil in the world accounting 60 to 80 percent of the total supply in the world market. However, statistics show that there is a continuing decline in coconut production. Decrease in production is attributed partly to the senility of trees, poor soil nutrition and improper farming practices, rampant cutting of coconut trees for timber, the low price of copra and land conversion to avoid land reform, as well as due to typhoons and droughts.

On June 7, 1995, RA. 8048 entitled: "An Act Providing for the Regulation of the Cutting of Coconut Trees, Its Replenishment, Providing Penalties therefore And For Other Purposes" was enacted. The law provides for the regulation of cutting of coconut trees to prevent ecological imbalance and severe economic dislocation of coconut farmers. It empowers the Philippine Coconut Authority (PCA) to issue permits to cut coconut trees; to collect twenty-five peso application fee; and require coconut farmers to plant coconut trees equivalent to the number of trees to be cut. Despite the enactment of R.A. 8048, the problems plaguing the coconut industry are not fully resolved.

This bill therefore, seeks to improve the condition of the coconut industry, principally by authorizing a private non-governmental organization, the Philippine Coconut Producers Federation (COCOFED), to represent coconut producers and farmers. Since it has expertise in determining proper agricultural methods in coconut growing, harvesting and other coconut production. It can render invaluable assistance to design policies providing incentives for the growth of the coconut industry. This proposed measure mandates PCA and COCOFED to evaluate and approve applications to cut coconut trees to avoid indiscriminate cutting. The bill also seeks to exempt coconut farmer-applicants from paying twenty-five (25) peso application fees to assist them, especially during times of economic difficulties when every centavo counts for them.

This measure requires applicants to plant two coconut trees for every tree to be cut to prevent the extinction of coconut trees. However, buyers of coconut lumber shall give farmers five (5) seednuts for every tree to be cut. This is intended to enhance the consciousness of the community on the importance of tree planting.

For the foregoing reasons, passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
