EXPLANATORY NOTE

Although women now have political rights in all but a few countries of the world, and are, therefore, in a better position to become more active agents of change, their subordinate position in many other fields has delayed progress. (Whittick, Arnold. Woman Into Citizen 1979.)

The history of every nation bears witness to the changes that have gradually taken place in the situation of woman at the local and national level, even at the international level. We have witnessed the development of wider possibilities for education and training, better access to economic opportunities, improve maternal and child health care and other social services, changes in civil laws and gradual changes in attitude towards women in general.

Their contributions to solving problems not only in their respective households but also in their workplace are more and more vital. Women should assume their responsibility as one of their priorities. This would finally make them equals as decision-makers in local and national affairs. This could give them an opportunity not only to improve their own situation but also share with men the responsibility in the affairs of society.

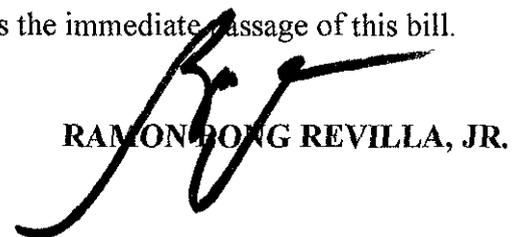

However, in the Philippines today, and even with the worldwide emancipation of women in society, discrimination against women generally still exists in the ordinary workplace. Filipino women continue to suffer indignities in the course of their employment, merely because they are women. While our Constitutional policy is clear - Section 14, Article II of the Constitution requires the State to recognize the role of women in nation-building and to ensure the fundamental equality before the law of women - enabling legislation to fully carry out this mandate, is lacking.

This bill penalizes the employer who will give preference to a male employee over a female employee in the hiring process, whether through notices or advertisements for employment or in the actual recruitment, hiring or employment of workers where the particular job can be equally handled by a woman.

Also, it prohibits the denial to any women the benefits of employment or other statutory benefits under our laws by reason of her sex.

Gone are the days when women were considered to be the weaker sex, according to a recent study by Time magazine. We must not only recognize that women have an important role in nation building, but also realize that their position in society is eminent, integral and indispensable.

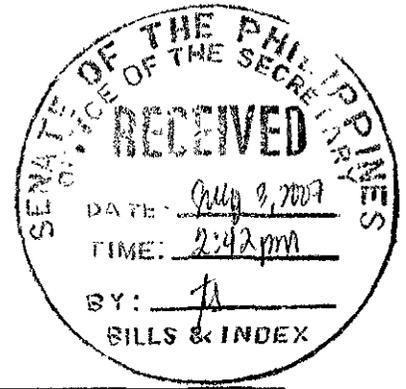

This humble representation urges the immediate passage of this bill.
