EXPLANATORY NOTE

Because times are difficult, price oftentimes becomes the determining factor when groups of people go out and eat in restaurants. Sometimes, however, people get shocked when the time comes for them to settle the bill – the price is markedly different from what was advertised because of unexpected additional charges. However, as the food has already been eaten and the service has already been performed, customers have no option but to pay to save face.

This bill seeks to protect people from having to pay unexpected prices by requiring restaurants to conspicuously post menus including the prices of all food available therein and all additional charges of whatever nature the establishment seeks to impose.<sup>1</sup>
